

SCENE TAKEN DURING THE REGATTA

An enormous crowd lined both banks of the river, while hundreds witnessed the events from Mayo's Bridge. The photograph shows an eight in the water, near the point where the Virginia and Potomac crews finished. A social gathering followed the aquatic sports.

fact added largely to the pleasure of the sport.

Neither team can claim the heat of the contest. If there was ever a tie game it occurred on Broad Street field yesterday. True, Richmond is credited with one more error than Roanoke, but pitcher Hale, who is responsible for one misplay, more than retrieved himself, and Sandherr's error was on a throw over Kandler's head. Newton's misplay resulted on a quick throw of a deep infield ball. None of the misuses were costly, and all three were forgotten in the preponderance of spectacular work.

Game Called Promptly.

Just before the game started, Manager Shaughnessy said: "We need this fellows; go after them." He picked his star twifter, Doane, to do the box work, and pitted against him, for the Colts, was Hale, who but recently wore a Tiger uniform. Manager Lipe urged his players to tackle anything in sight, and especially urged them to do their best to add another to the winning side of the Richmond standing column. The men heeded the words of their chief.

Roanoke had the best of the first five innings. In this time five hits were secured off Hale. The closing seven innings were in favor of Lipe's nine. Five balls were knocked into free territory, and aside from scoring in the eighth, it seemed in the seventh when Selber reached second base, that the Colts would surely score. When the home-plate was in danger, Doane or Hale, on the occasion might be seemed to lance, and the batsmen following proved easy.

Richmond's Run Earned.

Holland was walked in the fourth inning, after Shaughnessy had flown out to Selber. Ryan's hit sent Holland to second, and Painter's hit, between left and center, in the field, brought the tally in. Richmond's run was earned. Leon singled and was sacrificed. He took third on Kandler's out, Newton to Presley, and came in on Wallace's beautiful hit to center field. It was a proud moment for the big Colt, but he frisked too gayly, and was caught by Ryan in an attempt to piler second.

Hale, one of whose virtues is keeping an eye on all the bases, made an unusual play in the fifth, when he caught Robertson off second base; but Robertson is not to be censured, as, but for his wonderful running catch of Selber's fly over second in the fourth, the Colts would have increased their percentage. No special credit is due to any player except, of course, to the men on the firing line—as spectacular work is credited to every man on the opposing teams. Each man of the eighteen was given a ball to field, and they all displayed winning ability.

Those who did not see the game have something to regret, while those who did will have something to talk about as long as baseball is the national pastime. No strike-out records were broken, no batting averages fattened, but consider it all, and it will furnish amusement for hours. Score:

did the best we could. It was a very close race, and if we had to be defeated, we were glad that it was by so narrow a margin. Everything about the race was all right. We are pleased that two of our men won one race—the canoe race—at least.

Brilliant Scene.

The regatta yesterday afternoon was a beautiful occasion. Early before the hour of the first races, the bridge and the banks were packed with spectators, and the river was dotted with craft of all sort, containing onlookers. The boat club, there was hardly room to stand, and the presence of many women added to the color and brilliancy of the scene. A band was in attendance to amuse while the races were being started.

Everything went off smoothly, and there was all the color and excitement and intense interest that there are in the races which attract larger attendance, just as stirring, as one between Harman and Yale, and yesterday the James might indeed have been taken for the Thames at New London, or the Charles at Boston on a similar occasion. The weather was perfect for the race—a little cloudy and not too hot to affect the players too greatly. It was, indeed, "a really heating weather."

The Early Events.

The first event of the regatta was the eight-oared shell for club members. Distance, one-half mile, and Coxswain, Beers, of the Whites, urged his crew to an easy victory.

Next came the pleasure boat race, one-quarter mile, and this was a race of interest, because of the fact that women acted as coxswains. F. D. Cluis won without difficulty, with James S. Manning second, and H. L. Staples third. Some of the others were more interested in the fair coxswains than in the race, and these arrived at the finish as slowly as they could drift.

The Double Gig Race.

The double gig race, the third event, was close, and not over half a length apart when the boats crossed the line. M. R. Gilliam and J. P. McCarthy rowed the victory.

The Fourth Event.

The fourth event of the program was the four-oared gig race, one-quarter of a mile. The Reds, under Coxswain Wadley, stroked to the tape first. F. E. Smith, of the Potomacs, kindly took Kandler's place on the Reds' crew, and thereby added to the already cordial feeling between the Potomacs and Virginians.

The canoe race afforded both novelty and amusement. Two of the canoes turned over at the very start, and this created much laughter on the banks. This contest was not confined to club members, so Miller and Spransey, of the Potomacs, took out a canoe and entered the race. They handled it like young Indians on the Great Lakes, and came out ahead by a length or so. This was one victory, at any rate, for the Washington team. John M. Royall and J. P. McCarthy came in second, and for third place F. D. Cluis and H. L. Smith won.

Canoe Tournament.

The sixth feature was extremely amusing and came in the shape of a canoe tournament. F. D. Cluis and

H. L. Smith won the aquatic tourney, using padded lances, thrusting their foes from their boats and overturning them. One of the water warriors afforded much amusement on shore by falling out of the boat when starting to stand up and wind the lance, starting out again, knocking his steersman out, and overturning the rival boat.

The Day's Event.

The feature of the day was the big race between the Potomacs and the Virginians, and from the time Coxswain Wadley piped out through his megaphone, "Take it easy; take it easy," just when the crew started to stand up and wind the lance, until the rival crews, sweating and panting, almost exhausted, after the race, gave each other the customary cheering, excitement ran high. When way up the river, two crimson specks showed out against the shore, each moment growing larger to the eye, everybody was uptoo with feverish interest.

Cheers for Both Teams.

When the Virginia crew landed on the boat, stood ashore, and came back and lifted the shell above their heads, the Virginia crew, the applause was loud and long and hearty. And was hardly less loud and long when the Potomacs walked up on the gangplank, defeated. They were game losers; they had proved themselves admirers of all by their true sportsman's grit and clean conduct. There was the utmost fine feeling among the men of the rival crews.

The eighth event took place while the crews were going up to start. It was a swimming race, and F. D. Cluis demonstrated himself an easy victor in this laughable struggle.

The swimming race was won by Gordon Smith, who also came first in the next event, distance diving. Both these events were interesting and marked by many a good feat.

Medals for Rowing Crews.

The members and guests of the Virginia Boat Club were delightfully entertained at the regatta grounds. Judge Beverly T. Crump, in a witty manner, presented the several prizes won in the contests, and when this had been done, presented each member of the winning Virginia crew with a gold medal, the gift of W. P. Gordon, and the silver trophy, "The Berry Club," to the club as the victorious emblem of its crew.

The regatta day ended with an informal entertainment by the club. The day was very successful, and there certainly have been few prettier races than the principal one yesterday.

The Racing Committee.

The officers and committee of the day were: Umpire and starter, W. Y. Redford; judges, W. G. Watson, Charles R. Zappone, E. L. Roden, J. L. Hill, and John Hill.

The racing committee—W. R. Claiborne, W. L. Gilliam, W. E. Crawford, Committee on arrangements—W. L. Gilliam (chairman), W. G. Watson, R. B. Forrest, Woodson Wadley.
